Difference Between Been and Being

1. Originated from “be”, both the words might seem similar but “been” and “being” are used as “past participle” and “present participle” respectively.
2. “Being” can be used with prepositions. But “been” should never be used with prepositions.
3. After “to have” verb like have, has had- “been” is used. Conversely, after “to be” verb such as am, are, is “being” is used in a sentence.
4. “Being” is used as a gerund, verb, and a noun. But “been” plays the role of a verb always in the sentence.
5. Actions represented in the perfective form which means a task has been finished “been” is used. And “being” can be used to show actions in the form of progressive. In other words, the event is ongoing.
6. To maintain accordance with the verb with its subject “been” is used with past participles. Examples of which have been described above. The preceding verb for “being” must be in “to be” form.
