Difference Between Caribou and Reindeer

1. Although most of you may say that the caribou and the reindeer are the same animals named differently in different parts of the world, there are several points of distinction between them.
2. Although caribou is normally found in the jungle or out in the open in herds and cannot be domesticated at all, reindeer can be domesticated for different reasons such as food, clothing, and shelter.
3. The breeding season of a caribou and a reindeer is also different. Reindeer start their breeding season almost four months before the breeding time of the caribou.
4. Another distinguishable aspect between a caribou and a reindeer is the size of their body. If you take the average, a reindeer will appear to be much larger than a caribou.
5. The distance traveled by a caribou and a reindeer to migrate is also different from each other. Caribou can easily travel 3000 miles each year to find a green pasture. However, reindeer do not travel so much to find a better place to live.
